IMITATION OF LIFE

"There's an element of tactile memory I feel attached to each medium I use, and since 2019 until now, that sensation of visceral memory has resonated most with archival family photographs. The history is conveyed not just in the moment of time the picture captured, but also in the fragility of the photograph itself. I try to convey the nostalgic intimacy they stir in me by rendering the photographs either on fabric or in digital collage."

The pressed flowers are completely vulnerable. They are fragile, dry, and brittle, just like the old photographs onto which they've been placed... and the delicate histories those photographs carry into the present. I also feel the act of drying these pressed flowers is an act of archiving in itself. Most of these flowers are inextricably bound to my culture and are quite literally grown by my Nani's hand."
